

MAPPING A COURSE FOR WILDERNESS ADVENTURE

A GROUP of city slickers TEST THEIR ORIENTEERING skills AT THE HALIBURTON FOREST AND Wild life PRESERVE

IT'S A BLUSTERY SUNDAY MORNING. From deep within the woods, a glimpse upwards to the leafy red maple ceiling reveals a dark and forboding sky.

A nippy fall wind whistles through the forest as trees bend and creak.

Then the rain starts to fall. Not just a few drops, but a drenching, unrelenting downpour.

In the middle of this mess of natural activity, ten people trek through the mud, burrs and bush. While it might be assumed that anyone so foolish to be wandering in the forest under such inclement conditions could be lost, the reality of the situation is that this group of people is actually learning how not to get lost even in the most harsh of terrain.

The seven women, two men and their instructor Mark Smith are taking part in the Haliburton Forest and Wild Life Reserve's Wilderness Navigation Course. This weekend course, now in its fourth year, offers an introduction to the basic essentials of finding one's way in the forest. From the initial theoretical session on Friday evening, the course progresses to the point where, on the Sunday, the participants go out into the woods to get some hands-on experience.

"We're going to build on what we learned yesterday," says Smith. "They now know the terrain they'll encounter."

Smith, a tall, humorous man with an amiable face, has been teaching this course at Haliburton Forest for four years with his wife Christine Kennedy. Both Smith and Kennedy, owners of Chrismar Mapping Services in Toronto, are considered to be two of Canada's foremost wilderness navigation experts.

"We spend a lot of time in the woods ourselves making maps and so we're comfortable in the woods," says Smith who was originally trained as a teacher with outdoor education qualifications.

Smith and Kennedy's course is unique compared to others in that it does not focus on using a compass.

"We have a slightly different approach because we approach wilderness navigation with maps. Compasses are used only as an aid."

Maps, Smith says, are full of information, but often people cannot read them properly. It takes practice to use a map to its full potential.

"We practice in getting people out with their maps and compasses because the more they use them, the more they understand what the symbols mean."

"First of all, where are we?" Smith asks the students as they get out of the van and prepare to embark on a hike through the woods. "Guess where we are."

Dressed in slickers of every colour, sporting Tilley hats and knapsacks, and holding tightly onto compasses, plastic-covered maps and safety whistles tied with fluorescent ribbon, the participants scout around to look for identifiable natural features.

After pinpointing their location, Smith suggests they practice pacing. Pacing is necessary, he says, to judge distance when the terrain is difficult.

"In featureless terrain, it helps to have a measure of distance and this is the only option you've got."

Smith draws a line in the sandy soil and walks down the trail, leaving the group behind.

"Wow! We're going to get our exercise this morning," someone says as they watch Smith mark out a distance of 100 yards.

"Walk this three times. Count your pace and average the three (results)," Smith orders.

So up and down the trail everyone goes. They are an eager, enthusiastic bunch. And so, much laughing and joking occurs. But even in the most jocular of times, they are serious about learning what it takes to make it through the woods.

They are mostly novices. There is a teacher, a librarian, and a journalist among other professions. They come from Waterloo, Toronto and Collingwood. But while they possess different backgrounds, they share a common goal.

"For a lot of them, they've been a little intimidated to go into the woods and find their way around," says Smith. "They've felt uncomfortable with their map-reading skills or with navigating the way for someone else."

"We're always trying to find our way around. Going through towns or driving through a city to find a client somewhere, you have to read a map. Not everyone can and these people have recognized that," says Smith as he keeps an eye on his pacing students. "They're trying to overcome it."

One by one, the students finish this exercise and gather around Smith. Together, they decide to investigate an interesting, unknown feature they have found on the map. They will have to head east, off the main trail and across a marsh to find it.

"Try and spend a lot of time looking at the features," Smith advises. And then, in sending them off, adds, "There's a McDonald's in here so we can stop and have a milkshake."

The soaked and soggy group responds with some sarcastic laughter and then falls into a more or less straight line.

Towards the rear is Jane Foley. Dressed in army green combat gear lent to her by her son, Foley admits that she finds the course physically challenging. When the group heads off the trail, they face obstacles such as rocky ledges, muddy swamps, and fallen trees and this sometimes leaves Foley out of breath. But she is as gung-ho as the rest and hustles to keep up.

Foley, a railway enthusiast who is vacation in Haliburton until November, discovered the course when she came up to the Reserve to check out the on-site steam engine. She picked up a brochure and eventually registered.

"I want to refresh my orienteering skills," she says. "I used them as a Girl Guide leader years ago...I want to go out into the bush again. I'd kind of like to be outdoors more."

Suddenly Smith brings the group to a halt.

"How far have we come?" he asks.

Everyone pulls out their compass and fiddles with their maps while trying to figure out in their heads how many paces they have taken.

Someone offers a tentative answer, "A little over 200 metres maybe?"

Smith agrees and continues on with a line of questions.

"So what is going to happen up ahead?"

Again there is a buzz of voices as the students confer with each other and their maps before responding.

"A trail junction?"

"A marsh and a beaver dam?"

Smith asks a lot of questions. He does not lead the way, but rather allows the students to decide on the route. He guides them gently and even allows them to get lost.

Well into the woods, the trail junction and the marsh does not materialize. The surrounding features do not match up with the map. So Smith calls the group together and they discover they are off course. Because of overgrowth, they missed the trail leading to the marsh.

"The biggest mistake people make when they get lost is they don't stop and try to relocate," says Smith.

After studying the maps, the group realizes that the marsh is to the left. And so everyone heads through the tall wet grasses, mud and bush to reach water's edge. On reaching the marsh, someone says wearily, "With any luck, a four-by-four will come along and pick us all up." Everyone smiles at such a thought.

But despite the pounding rain and having reached the desired location, the group decides to go on further into the forest. A creek first stands in the way, but with a little team work, everyone makes it across. It is already quite clear that these people are conquering their fears.

"People are more and more interested in getting into the wilderness and discovering what Canada is about, but people are intimidated to go into the woods," says Smith. "Ontario is more geared towards water-based activities. So people are less intimidated to go canoeing than they are to go off into the woods. When people do go into the woods, they tend to go along the trails. But there are so many neat things off the trail."

One of the neat things this group discovers is the feature they could not identify from their map at the start of the hike — a little cliff. The students stop to closely examine the symbol on their maps that represents this cliff.

Then one of the students looks around.

"Where are the men?" she asks after discovering that the two guys are missing.

"They're building an ark," jokes one woman as the rain continues to pelt down.

"They're doing manly things," says another.

But within minutes Duncan MacPhee and Dave Evans join up with the women. They've lagged behind while discussing their experiences on wilderness outings.

MacPhee, a middle-aged man almost hidden inside his yellow raincoat, is from Oakville. He heard about the course at an outdoor store in Toronto.

"I want to do some wild country hiking," he says, adding that he does have some experience. "I've hiked before, but only using well-marked trails."

MacPhee admits the course has been challenging and although he's not quite ready yet to venture into the outdoors alone, he has picked up a few skills.

"It teaches you how to see. Some city people don't have a clue."

Evans hails from Pembroke. A bearded, outdoors type, he is taking the course to help him with the management of an outdoor education centre he has set-up with Deirdre Billes, another one of the course participants. Their Omagaki Wilderness Centre is an alternative energy resource centre south of Pembroke which offers a summer camp and other educational opportunities.

Although Evans has already taken an instructors course in wilderness navigation, he registered in this novice course in order to brush up on his orientation and trail-making skills.

Both Evans and Billes agree that the course works because it is "hands-on."

"That's the best," says Billes. "You learn the theory and they apply what you learn."

And Evans and Billes say they are learning from the finest.

"(Chrismar) has the orienteering market cornered. You can ask them any question and they'll know the answer," says Evans.

While they are not quite ready to participate in any competitive orienteering events such as "mountain marathons," Evans and Billes say they will consider competition next year. For now though, the expertise they gain from the course, they will apply to their everyday lives.

"It's a life skill," says Evans. "You can use it at any level, like us at the centre or when driving on the road."

With the group finally back together, Smith asks them if they want to forge ahead or head back to the main trail and have lunch at the van. While most are keen to continue, a few drenched participants are shivering from the cold. So a quick decision is made to return to the van for a change of clothes and something to eat.

The hike back to the main trail seems shorter than the trek in. Once at the road, everyone opts to stand out in the rain instead of finding refuge in the van. They mingle and ask questions of Smith while taking bites of their sandwiches.

And although everyone is tired and wet, the break is likely to be brief. Knowing the enthusiasm of this group of city slickers, they will soon be out again, braving the elements and trying not to get lost.

Instructor Mark Smith gives some pointers to his perplexed students.

Bandit unmask's acting talent in Camelot

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

BANDIT PLOPS HIS LARGE FRAME on the floor with a whomp, his jaw immediately and dejectedly placed between his paws. As the world revolves around him, the only thing that moves are his sad brown eyes, quizzical and yet all knowing.

Sigh. Life is just too much for this dog.

It's at this moment that you realize why all of Bandit's friends knew that the role of Horrid the Battle Weary Dog in the upcoming production of Camelot was written with a Bandit in mind. When they saw a canine casting call in the paper, they phoned director Curtis Eastmure to say "We know just who you're looking for..."

"I think he just has to come in with an old man and go 'umph' on the floor," says Karoul Talaba, looking down at the sprawled heap of white and brown fur on the kitchen floor of her Old Buckhorn Road home. The border collie/St. Bernard lifts his eyes, his tail thumps on the floor. He manages to rise to shake a paw in exchange for a piece of cheese before plopping down again. Inside the house, he's barely on his feet for longer than a minute. "We think he's a bit slow."

But put him outside, and Bandit loves to go visiting. It's this penchant for wagging his way into the hearts and homes of other county residents which makes it difficult to say the Talabas own Bandit. For one weekend or another, he's been "owned" by families in Minden, Lochlin, Donald, Blue Hawk Lake, Gooderham...

"He sort of belongs to the community," says Talaba, who doesn't mind her dog's errant ways. "Bandit has made us more friends than you could believe."

After one weekend at a cottage Blue Hawk Lake, a few kilometres from home as the dog roams, the cottagers descended on the home of Talaba and her husband Bruce Ryan a few weeks later to visit their old friend. "We took them out on the porch and they just talked to Bandit," she laughs.

Then there was the time the Selbie family returned to their Grass Lake home after church only to find Bandit sleeping on one of the beds.

Somehow he had managed to get inside and make himself at home. He stayed for a while and then the Selbies reluctantly phoned the Talabas to say "Bandit's here."

"People love him and they can't give him up," Talaba says.

The Sales family loves Bandit so much they would purposefully keep him for a few days before making the call - that is until Bandit convinced them it was time to get their own dog.

Perhaps the funniest story is of the day Bandit walked to Haliburton with a tire chained to his neck. It was winter, and someone at the vet's office had suggested the tire trick to keep him at home. But Bandit gets lonely and likes to visit Talaba's three children - Luke, Morgan, and Devon - at school. He was coming down a hill when the tire started to go faster than Bandit. It knocked the dog off its feet and into the hollow. A neighbour saw Bandit gleefully sliding down the hill in the tire.

However, now that Bandit has a starring role in Camelot - which the Highlands Little Theatre is producing this November - the Talabas will have to work hard to ensure the star doesn't go off visiting on the weekends of the play.

If their efforts fail and you happen to see this large, friendly dog strolling about the countryside, please don't invite him in for a visit. This battle weary dog is needed at home.

Local teen starts her modelling career with photos on the pages of the Sears catalogue

Sears model Loreena Rogers strikes a pose at home.

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

GLANCING THROUGH the recent Sears catalogue, many Highlanders probably did a double take when they got to page 356. That girl in the blue parka looks familiar. There she is again in purple, and yet again in turquoise. All told, her smiling face peers out at you eight times. Why does she look so familiar?

Loreena Rogers walks into the office at the Haliburton Highlands Secondary School with the same long, flowing blond hair and winning smile. Dressed in the school uniform of jeans and a t-shirt, she's a more casual version of the young woman in the catalogue, but there's no doubt they're one and the same.

Although modelling in the catalogue has made her a bit of a celebrity among her fellow Grade 9 classmates, Loreena prefers to remain rather low-key about the whole thing. She doesn't model because she thinks she's prettier than everyone else, and she certainly doesn't want anyone to get the impression she thinks she's better than everyone else.

"One thing I'm determined not to do is get an ego over it and I don't think I can because there are so many people who are so much prettier and talented than you," says the practical 14-year-old. In fact, she doesn't talk about the modelling very much at school. "It's personal," she says, and she never wants to sound as if she's bragging. "I don't want to be thought of as a snob."

For her, modelling is fun, but it's not her chosen profession. She sees it as a stepping stone on her way to becoming an actress. "I like pretending to be different people. It's neat and you learn stuff."

Recently she auditioned for a role in a Walt Disney movie about a group of adults looking back on their childhood summers at camp. "I was supposed to be the one all the girls were mad at and all the guys, you know..." Her voice trails off with the wisdom of a pretty, lathesome, blond-haired, popular teenage girl who knows all too well the effect such a combination is bound to have on others. Girls get jealous, boys get tongue-tied. You know.

Four hundred and fifty girls auditioned for the role but it was Loreena who prompted the director to fly up from New York. He asked her to read some lines from the movie, and while she was doing so, a crew from City TV arrived to catch a glimpse at the movie-making process.

Eventually, the role went to another girl, but if she bows out or there are any problems, it will probably go to Loreena.

But isn't it hard for her to put her ego on the line like that, especially at an age when teenagers are already sensitive enough about their looks and desired image? Loreena knows that trap is waiting for her, but she refuses to be drawn in.

"You can't be like that because you'll end up always putting yourself down. You have to be confident. And you tell yourself that they're not judging who you are, they're going by what they're looking for."

If Loreena didn't get the role, she knows it wasn't because she wasn't good enough or pretty enough. She just didn't quite fit the mental picture the director had of who should play the role. That's not her fault, and there's nothing she can do about it except keep on auditioning for other roles.

Meanwhile, she has the modelling to give her more exposure.

It was through her mother's friend's sister's daughter that Loreena first found out about the Judy Welch modelling agency in Toronto. Loreena's mother, Rosalind Bagg, thought her third daughter might be interested in joining up. Loreena has always wanted to be an actress but when you live near West Guilford, it can be rather hard to find out about any roles.

To become a client of the agency, candidates must first pass a course. From March until May 31 last year, Loreena learned all about the various aspects of modelling and how to conduct yourself at auditions. At the final fashion show, Loreena impressed a representative of the agency's New Faces division. It was through this that she began modelling for Sears.

For the first couple of hours, Loreena was very nervous. Everyone else was so busy and knew Who's that girl?

Teen hopes to keep low-key at high school about her recent modelling success

The waiting was worse for a segment of Kids in the Hall in which Loreena portrayed... a girl lining up at the water fountain. Luckily she was paid by the hour because this one brief exposure to television fame took a long, long time. For Loreena it meant a lot of waiting around, but it was exciting to watch all the activity.

Although the segment has already appeared on television, Loreena hasn't seen it yet - they can't pick up the channel at her Cranberry Lake home.

What do her sisters think of all the attention she's getting? "They don't have any reason to be jealous," she says, and they are very happy that she's able to pursue the career she's always pined after.

In fact, when asked who her role models are, her sister Jennifer is named, along with her mother.

"My mother, definitely my mother," Loreena first responds. Those car rides back and forth to Toronto have become very special, allowing each to spend some quiet time with each other. "She talks to me and she's very open. She thinks about things and when she decides what she wants to do, she does it. I hope people think of me the way I think of her."

Jennifer is two years older than Loreena. She wants to be a doctor, a career Loreena could never picture for herself. "She's always there for me. She's a very down to earth person and I like that."

As much as she loves them, Loreena would not hesitate to move to Toronto. It's very hard to keep in contact with agents and companies from the Highlands, and there's a lot of travelling to contend with. In Grade 8, Loreena missed more than 30 days of school and she had to work very hard to maintain honours. But her mother thinks she's still too young for such a big move.

Back at HHSS, Loreena is just trying to blend in at her new school. She realizes there can be a kind of reverse discrimination against pretty girls - people automatically assume they're not intelligent, or that they're "stuck up" and vain. "People judge you and I don't think that's right. I like people to be liked for what they are and not what they look like. I don't judge other people so I don't want them to do it to me."

Loreena just has to look at the other teenagers competing for a modelling or acting assignment to know that any true success is going to come from within, not because of her looks.

"If I really want it to happen," she says, gazing off into the future, "I can make it happen. I just put myself to it."

exactly what was to be done. Loreena just listened and did as she was told. Asked how she could be so nervous and yet seem so at ease in the photos, she says that after a while, "it's more like having fun and talking to them."

"Everyone's really outgoing," she says of the atmosphere at the snow-blanketed farm north of Toronto where the photos were shot.

She was amazed at the amount of work that went in to each picture. As well as people doing make-up and hair, there were clothes stylists - Loreena had to return a few days after the first shoot because they decided they wanted her jacket zipper done up -, lighting experts, and of course the photographer. "For one outfit he used about three rolls of film - and they only use one picture. It takes forever. You're usually there for two hours."

A new definition for "riding the rails"

by NANCY KUZMICH

Staff Reporter

COULD THE Rails-to-Trails Conservancy be coming to Haliburton? In a recent letter to "The Echo", Shawn Hagerman laments the loss of one of the Haliburton area's biggest attractions, the Skyslider, and wondered when we'll see more use of the former CNR line which stretches from Kinmount to Haliburton. He had recently returned from a Vermont vacation and found the similarities between that state and Haliburton were numerous. Both "need to attract and maintain its summer tourism."

The recreational path in Stowe was five miles long with five feet of pavement and was often filled with walkers, parents pushing babies, bikes and rollerbladers.

Hagerman noted that the narrow corridor linking Gelert, Lochlin, Donald and Haliburton is already graded, flat and owned by the county. Provincial funding would be a must to "help build an important addition to help our county's economy in a non polluting manner."

He's not the first to think of the idea. County Warden George Simmons says $10,000 was originally in this year's budget to look at the idea but financial restraints soon pared that back to $1,000. He says the corridor probably won't be further developed until there's a need for make-work projects in the community. So far that emphasis has been put on construction.

When county council meets again in the fall, there should be better indications of whether now's the time to go ahead.

"It would be the first phase."

Simmons thinks trails could be started from Head Lake Park in Haliburton or Kinmount and be extended from those two points depending on how popular they are. Paths could be widened so walkers wouldn't interfere with snowmobilers and asphalt sections could be put in for rollerbladers.

Although county roads engineer Dave Valentine doubts any funding for bike trails will be eligible for a rails-to-trails program, ("the policy is to fund them where they provide an alternative to roads"), Simmons remains hopeful that Haliburton's trails may yet receive a roads designation.

County Chief Administrative Officer Gary McKnight says the problem is that the existing rails run parallel to County Road 1, so that ties in with what Valentine said. But the county is still looking into any possibilities.

"It might be a good project to check around for grants from (Ministry of) Tourism and Recreation."

Since 1985 in the United States, the Rails-to-Trails Conservancy has been converting old rail tracks into walking and bicycle paths. As described in their information brochure, the Washington, D.C. based non-profit organization notifies trail advocates, local government and groups about upcoming abandonments, assists public and private agencies in following proper legal procedures and publicizes rails-to-trails issues throughout the U.S. In Washington, the RTC works to secure funding programs and simplify regulations to promote rail-trail conversions. It takes relatively little development since the roadbeds need only be graded, compacted and surfaced.

An interesting statistic is that today, railroad companies are abandoning over 3,000 miles of track - a distance greater than from New York to San Francisco - every year!

The RTC's plan to build a 'transcontinental railway network' has already come to fruition in such states as Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Wisconsin and California.

Economic Development Officer Mark Stagg hopes some steps in starting a rails-to-trails program in Haliburton County may begin as early as the middle of this month.

"We want to see something done. Some of the issues that have first priority are going to be trail-related."

He's referring to the next meeting, on September 15, of the Haliburton Tourism and Recreation Development Committee, which has now become part of the Chamber of Commerce's marketing committee. Stagg would like to see the "quickest, best, easiest, cheapest" solution so the ball can start rolling. The committee will be mulling over 'action sheets' compiled in the last year aimed at developing a tourism marketing strategy for the county. That, along with Hagerman's letter to the paper and other correspondence Stagg has received, has convinced him that people want rails-to-trails incorporated in that larger tourism picture.

Tammy English is quite happy with the trail's condition right now. The ambulance attendant lives on the Old Donald Road and boards her two horses at a neighbouring farm. She and her three children often ride along the old railway path, sometimes even coming right into Haliburton where the horses get a drink from Head Lake. One day she plans to ride all the way to Kinmount for a camp-out. Next year, any new foals will be brought over to the trail where they can be taught how to walk nicely without the presence of cars that may scare them and cause an accident.

English doesn't mind if the trails become a public retreat as long as her horses would still be welcome. In fact, the suggested asphalt for bikes and roller blades would make things a lot easier on her horse's hooves. Right now the trails are in pretty good condition but large rocks and stones often hamper smooth progress and she thinks a crushed gravel or packed dirt surface would be better. As for sharing the little-used pathway, as long as courtesy and common sense prevail, English has no problem. Although she finds ATV operators can sometimes travel a little too quickly, thereby scaring the horses, she has no complaint about snowmobilers who often stop their machines and get off in order to calm the animals.

One good result of greater usage, she hopes, is the maintenance of the trails, particularly when it comes to broken bottles.

"If a horse steps on the glass they can hurt their hoof quite badly."

Haliburton County Snowmobile Association president Brian Watts thinks rails-to-trails is "probably one of the best ideas I've ever heard." During the winter months, the HCSA makes arrangements with the townships to have a grader level and prepare their trails. He sees no reason why this couldn't be done in the late spring or early summer for trail-users as well.

But Watts thinks that to make the program work, an organized group similar to his would have to take on responsibilities of maintenance and fund-raising. During the winter, the HCSA does its own heavy work, including building and repairing any necessary bridges.

"It's got to be beneficial to the community," he says, adding that the potential tourists the trails should attract will also spend their money at local business establishments.

"That's the name of the game - to bring tourists in."

Pedal Power

A B.C. cyclist advocates developing more bike trails for better health and a better environment

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

TERRY CONNELLAN lifts up his feet. Pointing to his two well-worn sneakers, he says "Can you see that one is darker than the other?"

On the previous day, Connellan had left Kinmount with the intention of riding his bicycle along the abandoned rail corridor to Haliburton. About eight kilometres along, the corridor became a big puddle. Perhaps a beaver dam had flooded.

The man who has ridden his bicycle to the four corners of this country - including Inuvik, where few people have even flown to - thought he could make it. But the puddle was deeper than expected and at one point he had to put his sneaker-clad foot into the cool water. The water made the one shoe darker than the other and a day later, it had yet to completely dry out.

But that couldn't dampen Connellan's torrent of words in praise of public recreational trails, and their potential to become busy destinations for people of all ages and aptitudes.

"You guys can set an example for all of Ontario," says the enthusiastic, almost bubbly, 58-year-old man who's a riding example of the benefits of keeping in shape. "I don't think it should be perceived as the turn of the corner for tourism, but it may be the beginning of improvement of lifestyle in the area."

"There's no stress, no noise, no traffic. You get out and see the country instead of just blasting through."

Connellan knows a lot about recreational trails. As an outdoors columnist for the Victoria Times, he's ridden his bike on every road in British Columbia, not to mention the roads in every other province and territory in Canada. In the past 12 years he's put 60,000 kilometres on his peddling feet.

He was in Haliburton to do a story about bicycling through the autumn colours from Barrie to Bancroft. He didn't know about the Haliburton corridor, which is owned by the county and open to the public year-round, until he spent the night in Kinmount. He had intended to travel east along Highway 507 when he saw the trail cut through the village.

After being forced to back-track to by-pass the puddle, he got back on the trail in Gelert and rode to Glebe Park, where he camped out for the night. While in Haliburton he addressed the Haliburton Rotary Club, rode the trails at Haliburton Forest and dropped by Shawn Hagerman's office to talk about the rail corridor's potential. (People who ride their bikes across Canada tend to be a bit gregarious by nature.)

A few weeks ago, Hagerman wrote a letter to the Echo commenting on the popularity of the public trail in Stowe, Vermont, and the recreational opportunities we have in our own backyard.

(When the county first purchased the rail line intact and had the tracks taken out, it budgeted $10,000 a year for improvements. However, with the recession, county council has budgeted only $1,000 for each of the past two years.)

Right now, the trail is primarily used by snowmobilers in the winter. This is compatible with Connellan's ideas for other uses, especially since there already is such a large network of cross country ski trails available.

But for summertime use, Connellan says motorized vehicles would have to be prohibited.

The trail's for horseback riders, strollers, bicyclists, bird watchers, nature lovers. What about roller bladers, asks Hagerman, the father of three roller blading enthusiasts. Could you pave a portion of the trail?

That's possible, says Connellan, who quickly tells the story about a man he met on one of his bicycling adventures. In the middle of the woods, this man had a huge paved parking lot for his business. It turns out he had bought another development, ripped up pavement there and transported the crushed pavement to his business, where on a nice hot day, he re-applied it and packed it down to a smooth surface. If county crews are tearing up pavement, Connellan says, they could save the pavement and when they had enough, re-apply it on the trail so the only cost to taxpayers is labour.

"It's important to keep it in perspective," says Connellan, cautioning against big dreams at the beginning. Keep it simple and you'll still get lots of people using the trails.

Why bother to encourage more use of the trail? Both Connellan and Hagerman believe people need more opportunities to exercise. Doctors would agree that regular exercise promotes better health and is a necessary part of a weekly regime. The trail is safe and pretty, running through some beautiful spots, such as Ritchie Falls.

"I met a delightful couple in their nineties walking their dog," Connellan says. Sometimes he stops to talk, but "the nice thing about cycling is that you can go by someone and carry out a conversation before you're out of hearing distance."

"And you don't miss any of the bird calls or flowers - or the rain or the dust," he laughs. Or the puddles.

Terry Connellan (with helmet) shows Adam Hagerman, Glen Sharpley and Shawn Hagerman how to load 85 pounds of gear onto a bicycle.

He started bicycling after he hurt his foot and was no longer able to take part in running marathons. "My doctor said 'Buy a bike.' Then I met these two older ladies bicycling across Canada and I thought if these two old birds can ride across the country, look at how old I am, I should be able to do it."

By making "every mistake in the book", Connellan finally got his act together and put it on the road. Telling bicyclists that they have every right to ride on the paved portion of the road, he says he's only had one accident - and that's when someone deliberately tried to hit him.

To women who let fear keep them off the trails, Connellan says "Ralph the Rapist is not behind the next tree. It's very safe, unless you create a situation in which you're vulnerable. It takes common sense."

That advice applies to bears as well. In the 95 pounds of gear he carries on his bike, foodstuffs are always kept separate, and when he camps out for the night, the food pack is strung high in a tree branch, away from the tent.

Once you start bicycling, you'll want to go farther. "You start doing this and the next thing you know you won't be tired after a few kilometres. Every day you're capable of doing another kilometre."

Connellan is certainly a living testament to this. Not everybody who endeavours to ride the Haliburton trail will set their sights on a cross country adventure as a follow-up. But a few puddles won't stop them from discovering one of the best recreational opportunities in the Highlands.

One person's contribution

Don't call her an activist, but Debbie Hilkers is helping to take out this community's garbage

By JILL SAWYER
Staff Reporter

THERE'S NO LOFTY philosophy involved in Debbie Hilkers' approach to environmental problems. She shies away from vague catchphrases such as "saving the planet" and "eco-friendly." She doesn't have time for the monumental garbage crisis of Metro Toronto, or the struggle to "green" other smog-choked cities. Instead, she's literally starting in her own back yard.

Every day, Hilkers carries a small pail of kitchen scraps to the composter at the edge of her garden. She uses the compost as fertilizer. At the end of the growing season, she pulls up the garden, runs it through her mulcher, and reuses it as ground cover, or to line her rabbit's cage. Everything is passed along to different stages, until it's completely worn out its usefulness. She's put the "cycle" in recycle.

As chairperson of the volunteer Public Liaison Committee for county council's Waste Management Master Plan, to say that Debbie Hilkers practises what she preaches would be an understatement. While attending meetings, and working with other volunteers to get the public involved in the county's landfill problems, she's constantly looking for ways to make her own home more efficient and easier on the environment.

"The time is right for this," she says. "I'm not looking to dictate to people what they should do, but I want to wake them up a little bit. I want to go out and do things, and not be held back by the procrastination and fear that keeps people sitting around tables, discussing things."

While the master plan itself has been shelved until the next county budget is ratified, Hilkers has been working behind the scenes to keep it's basic premise going. "It's not just about the environment. Almost every person is interested in how not to be a polluter, but they're frustrated by the red tape, by wondering how to get things done."

"I've never really been an outstanding person in any one field. But if I can do this, then maybe people will see they can do it too."

Hilkers and her husband, Rob, live on 100 acres of woodland fronting Peterson's Road outside Carnarvon. Their tidy two-storey house sits in a clearing backed by pines and maples and a

'When I first tried this, it put me off a little,' says Debbie Hilkers about her recycling plan. 'It seemed to take a long time, and I stopped for a while. Then I decided to just do it one step at a time.'

cluster of solid, cleanly-built sheds and out-buildings, Rob's handiwork. One building houses a sawmill central to the Hilkers' brush-clearing and wood-chipping business. The leftover wood chips are layered on the ground through the yard.

Inside the house, he has finished most of the walls and a central stairway in pine. One corner is dominated by a homemade water heater, which operates with the heat of their wood-burning stove. The Hilkers have recycling down to a science.

"We don't live in the dark ages," Hilkers says, after explaining her recycling habits. "We just want to live comfortably and debt-free."

She estimates that in the past few years, they've cut their household waste by about 80 per cent. Using the composter year-round was the biggest change, and everything else started a step at a time.

"I buy as little packaging as possible, so right off the top I'm reducing what comes into the house," Hilkers is now at the point where she doesn't keep a garbage can in the kitchen. Kitchen scraps go in the composter, styrofoam trays are reused for holding her paints, and plastic bags are reused or returned to the store.

The Hilkers' recycling plan isn't confined to the kitchen. Excess paper, including junk mail, is burned in the wood stove. Hilkers takes old magazines to the hospital or the laundromat, and newspapers make the rounds of the rabbit's cage before being run through the mulcher. She buys most of her clothes second hand, and reuses worn-out towels as cleaning rags.

The result is that the Hilkers drive out to the dump about every six weeks, usually taking only one or two small grocery bags of garbage, mostly plastics, and a box full of bottles for the recycling bin. But none of this happened overnight.

"When I first tried this, it put me off a little," Hilkers says. "It seemed to take a lot of time, and I stopped for a while. Then I decided to just do it one step at a time. Now I just think ahead a little bit." Now the recycling plan is as much a household routine as any other. "You have to make it convenient for yourself or you'll quit."

Hilkers started getting involved in the county's waste problems around the same time that she was rethinking her own habits. When the Waste Management Master Plan was announced in the summer of 1990, she was intrigued by the fact that the county was holding open meetings about it, and that the politicians were making a serious effort to involve the public.

The Public Liaison Committee was formed in the fall of 1990, on a recommendation from the Ministry of Environment, and the county asked for volunteer representatives from all 10 municipalities. The committee would be there to inform the public about the plan, and also to take comments from the public to the county's waste management consultant and to county council's Waste Management Steering Committee.

In other words, Hilkers was involving herself as closely as she could with the bureaucracy without getting elected. Although she didn't officially become a member of the committee until January of this year, she attended meetings and kept up with each development.

She got involved with the political end of the problem for the same reason she started making changes around her house: economics.

"I think this issue is important because it's more than just being environmentally friendly. I wanted to get involved because I'm a taxpayer, and I know that waste management can be expensive if it's handled improperly. I also know that it can be done very economically."

She adds that "common sense is very inexpensive."

It was the first time she had ever been involved with any type of "cause," and she jumped into it with both feet. She saw that it was very easy to sit back and do nothing, and that people needed a way to get beyond the politics of the issue.

"I think this issue is important because it's more than just being environmentally friendly. I wanted to get involved because I'm a taxpayer and I know that waste management can be expensive if it's handled improperly. I also know that it can be done very economically."

"I want to be the person bridging the gap between the government and the public. The people sitting on the councils are locals. They're our neighbors."

But it was still frustrating that these neighbors seemed to be stonewalling a plan that outlined the future of the county's landfill sites and recycling programs. She says councillors are tied down by the poor economy, and afraid to promise money for projects.

"The overall economy is scaring people, but you can't allow it to paralyze you. If we don't make something happen now, that money's going to disappear and go somewhere else. They're not going to give us our tax money back"

Advocacy politics seems to agree with Debbie Hilkers. She's not tied down to the accountability that an elected official would have, yet she has access to the council's decisions as they're being made. And even if the master plan has been put aside for a few months, she has plans of her own.

This summer, with the help of a student from the Environmental Youth Corps, she and the committee organized a series of demonstrations and events, including presentations for each municipality on reducing waste and composting. They also held a landfill attendants' workshop, where one of the guest speakers was an attendant from South River who had saved the local municipality $20,000 in landfill costs with his recycling ideas. The committee also organized awareness of Waste Reduction Week last week.

On her own, Debbie is setting up an information base at her house, gathering tips on recycling and reducing garbage, and she hopes to network with volunteers in other parts of the province to share information.

With the committee, she wants to work towards setting up an environmental group on every municipal council, get the municipalities involved in composting, and possibly get youth groups to help with environmental projects around the county.

At home, she plans to experiment with different types of composters, and continue what she calls the "game" of figuring out new uses for things that would otherwise be tossed out.

She says that after all this, it's still up to the county to decide whether the master plan will go ahead. "The worst they can do is leave the waste management issue all together. If that happens I will go out on my own and start up a group. I'll be doing this with or without the county."

Studio Tour a huge success for visitors, artists alike

by LEN PIZZEY

THE WEATHER WAS as bright as the economic forecast for local artists this past weekend and as warm as the comments they heard from the throngs of people who made the fifth annual Studio Tour the most successful ever.

There was beauty in abundance along the studio tour route, both in the foliage that was at the peak of its brilliance and in the paintings, pottery, stained glass, sculpture and other works that participating artists had spent months creating.

While no one can say precisely how many people enjoyed all or part of this year's tour route, the number of cars parked at stops along the way, and the volume of sales, indicates the growing popularity of the event.

Painter Joan Hoad and her sculptor husband Peter welcomed hundreds of visitors to their home on Lake Kashagawigamog, and enjoyed the experience immensely. Like other participating artists, the Hoads greeted guests warmly, offering them refreshments and urging them to sign a guest book before they departed for other stops.

The Hoads have participated in all of the previous tours, and see two major benefits — the response they get from visitors, and the economic impact of so many people flocking to the county for the weekend.

"When you meet all these people and hear their remarks, it helps you to evaluate what you're doing. It's reinforcing for us."

"It's also a nice way to repay the area" for the lifestyle it affords. "If we can bring people in in this way, then we're doing our bit" said Joan.

The Lake Kashagawigamog studio of silk painter and watercolourist Mary Wallace is always one of the most popular stops on the studio tour and this year was no exception. Close to a thousand people visited their spectacular post and beam home high on a hill overlooking the lake on Saturday alone, and most took the time to enjoy the splendid view of the water and surrounding hills. Visitors also had an opportunity to try silk painting, with Mary taking time to explain how she transfers her ideas onto brightly coloured lengths of silk that become scarves and shawls. Mary's guest, watercolour artist Audrey Grant, was also present.

'It's what an artist works for'

sent to discuss her work with those who came to browse and buy.

John and Lindsay Beaudry of Ingoldsby are first time participants in the studio tour, and they clearly enjoying the experience when The Echo visited early Saturday afternoon.

"People have been really sweet" said Lindsay, who creates imaginative floral designs, while her husband John uses natural materials to make whimsical birdhouses anybody's feathered friends would be proud to call home. Lindsay spent much of the day answering questions not only about her work, but about the miniature horses that she and John keep as a hobby.

While John had an inventory of birdhouses for the tour, he was also confident that the weekend would result in custom orders, and experience common to many of the artists who take part in the tour.

"It's not like doing a show" says John, "You get people coming here because they want to be here. You get a really appreciative audience."

'Sam', Gary Chapman's whimsical rower, anchored in Mountain Lake

Everyone's so positive," Lindsay agrees. "The people who come here are really interested in what you do" she says.

Gary Chapman, one of the area's best known water colour artist, savours the studio tour as an opportunity to get to know the people who buy his paintings of the Haliburton landscape. The Mountain Lake studios of Gary and his wife, weaver Judy Chapman, are always a popular tour stop.

"The feedback" from visitors is the best thing about the tour, says Gary, "because you tend to create in your own little loneliness. This is the one weekend a year when we get people appreciating our work, and that's what an artist works for."

"Gallery sales have been going down each year, and the studio tour sales have been going up" he says, because people want more personal involvement in their art purchases, and a chance to meet the artist is important.

A touch of whimsy and humour awaited visitors to Chapman's lakeside painting studio. Anchored in the sun sparkled water of Mountain Lake was a rowboat with a mannequin dressed in a sou'wester, oars poised in mid stroke. This is 'Sam', the fisherman he includes in many of his paintings. Though intended merely to bring a smile of recognition to visitors, 'Sam' actually proved to be a good, if reticent, salesman. A Mountain Lake cottager who noticed the boat had not moved for hours came over to investigate, thinking the rower might need assistance, and ended up buying a painting!

Michael and Susan Butz have helped to organize the Studio Tour since its inception, and for them, as for the other artists, the effort pays off with sales and commissions. The Butz's create fine jewellery in gold and silver, and Michael also crafts canoes, paddles and classic rowing craft. They are full time artists and of necessity, must attend many crafts shows around the province, but they much prefer the opportunity to welcome people to their Blue Hawk Lake home.

"I find the people much nicer" when they arrive on the studio tour than the crowds who frequent major craft shows, says Michael. Many people take the tour planning to buy art, and the sales it generates for the Butz's are an important contribution to their yearly income. The tour also gives them exposure that produces commissioned work.

If there is one frustrating aspect of the tour for local artists, it's that they don't get a chance to take the tour themselves. This year they'll get that chance, if only vicariously. Organizers arranged for a volunteer to take a video camera to every studio. The tape will be made available to tour participants so they can see the efforts that their fellow artists go to make the Studio Tour a success.

Visitors head to the studio of Mary Wallace, high above Lake Kashagawigamog, on a brilliant autumn day. More than a thousand people arrived at the Wallace home over the two day tour. Most took a few moments to savour the marvellous autumnal view.

Happy Thanksgiving!

Minden welcomes by-law officer

by JANET HURLEY

Staff Reporter

The following are brief reports of items discussed at the Sept. 24 meeting of Anson Hindon and Minden council:

Welcome new by-law officer

Minden's new by-law enforcement officer has come home.

After 24 years of working in the by-law business in Richmond Hill, Marshall Miller has returned to the county where he was raised and educated.

"Welcome back to Haliburton," said Reeve Bern Berry to Miller at the council meeting.

Miller, a graduate of Haliburton Highlands Secondary School, was a senior building inspector in Richmond Hill before taking on his new posting.

"We feel he brings with him an extensive knowledge of building by-laws," said Berry.

Miller replaces Tom Hubercheck who resigned last month for personal reasons.

Miller, who currently resides in Minden with his wife, will commence his job on October 5th.

Courting for a court

Inaction and delays have forced council to redirect its efforts to secure a court facility.

A letter is being sent to the Attorney General, the Honourable Howard Hampton, to request his assistance in renewing the court in Minden, after letters to the Ministry of Correctional Services and MPP Dennis Drainville failed to incite any action.

"We don't seem to be able to get anywhere with them," said Reeve Bern Berry. "I don't know what else to do."

The letter writing campaign has been underway for several months. Minden wants the ministry to consider the community centre as a new court site. Last year, the ministry said Minden's court facility in the municipal building did not meet its standards because of a lack of wheelchair access and secure holding cells. Some cases are still heard in Minden, but a majority of them are being sent to Lindsay. This situation has proven to be an inconvenience to both the police and the public.

Council wants representatives from the ministry to look at the proposed court site and is urging that the court in Minden be renewed.

Hospital

Another council letter writing campaign is underway to strongly fight against any possible elimination or reduction of services at Minden Hospital.

Council agreed to write to the Ministry of Health, Premier Bob Rae and MPP Dennis Drainville regarding the future status of the hospital. Rumours have been flying that the hospital may face closure or a drastic cut in service. This high pressure campaign comes a week after Drainville issued a letter clarifying the government's position on the matter. In the letter, he assured the people of Haliburton County that the government has no plans to close the Minden hospital.

"I'm pleased to read Drainville's letter, that there is no danger to Minden," said Berry. "But he hasn't stated that the service given to us at Minden hospital will remain the same."

Councillor Jeanne Anthon said she too was uncomfortable with Drainville's response.

"I think there's a false sense of security built into his response."

In his letter, Drainville did not mention the plans of St. Joseph's Hospital in Peterborough which owns and manages the Minden Hospital. Figures released by St. Joseph's in April show Haliburton and Minden hospital running at a $270,000 deficit. St. Joseph's advised that unless government funding comes through, drastic reductions in service would occur. The Ministry of Health has in turn advised St. Joseph's against taking action until the study on long-term care in Haliburton County is complete.

In addition to the letter campaign, council agreed to attempt to organize a meeting with the Board of Management of St. Joseph's Hospital to present concerns.

Water for racing

Minden's water supply situation has forced the Minden Kinsmen Club to look at alternative water sources for the winter Ice Car Racing event.

Tom Prentice, of the Kinsmen Club, met with council to present a plan to bring water into the Minden Fairgrounds from Beaver Creek through underground pipes. The water is used to make the ice for the races.

Prentice agreed that the money the Kinsmen usually pay for using municipal water, will go towards the placement of the piping.

"I feel that we'll save on the water supply if it works," said

Reeve Bern Berry before council accepted the plan.

Response is "C"

The Minden Fire Department will not respond to certain situations handled by the ambulance service, council has decided.

A resolution, passed by council, authorizes the fire department to participate in tiered response with the ambulance service to a Level "C" only.

A tiered response applies to situations where a victim is not breathing or is unconscious or is severely bleeding. It also applies to motor vehicle collisions and heart attacks. Level of response are as follows: "A" requires a response to all calls; "B" requires a response only if ambulance response is delayed; and "C" requires no response. A Level "C" response means the fire department is just notified of the call.

"We decided that a "C" response was the only logical one," said Councillor Grant Plooard who added that the fire fighters are not properly trained for tiered response situations.

"How many things can you ask a volunteer fire fighter to learn?" Plooard asked.

Akin to Lutterworth

In two separate resolutions, Anson, Hindon and Minden has thrown its support behind Lutterworth Council.

Council agreed to a resolution from the Township of Lutterworth recommending that the County of Haliburton take over the administration of the Haliburton County Ambulance Service. Council then voted to support Lutterworth's call for the construction plans of the new County Building to commence immediately.

In response to the resolution on the new County Building, Reeve Bern Berry expressed his hope that the building would be constructed in Minden.

"This is the County town. I know there is going to be strong opposition to this at County level, but it's nice to know we have people (Lutterworth council) thinking like us."

The ongoing saga of water supply

Efforts to build a new source of water supply for Minden have reached yet another stage of completion.

A final document consisting of all the information and environmental studies done on the planned well site has been put together for public perusal.

The document, which will be available to the public for 30 days, is Phase IV of an environmental assessment process. The process includes a series of stages set out by the Ministry of Environment to investigate and evaluate the environmental impact of establishing an alternative water supply. It has taken four years to reach Phase IV of the process.

According to Public Works Superintendent Clayton Cameron, the report contains no new information since the last public meeting when the draft report was presented. The only change is that the construction date, which was initially slated for the summer or fall of 1992, has been changed to the spring of 1993.

After the 30 day public viewing period, the report will go to the MOE for approval.

"There is a possibility it could be rejected," Cameron told the councillors. "But that's unlikely because MOE have approved all the little bits that have come in all along."

Public skating

Council has agreed to sponsor a public skating day at Minden arena after corporate sponsors failed to pull through.

"I've been led to believe that because of the economy, business people have not responded as well as in the past," said Berry.

Public skating days are sponsored by local businesses. It costs companies and organizations $96 to host the event and in turn, the sponsor is given recognition and some publicity.

Because the end of the year is in sight, the township's promotional budget is limited, and so council has agreed to absorb the costs of only one public skating day in 1992. When 1993 comes around, council will look at its budget and consider sponsoring more.

Road christened

In a continuing effort to make identification of properties easier, council agreed to the naming of a private road.

East Bob Lake Road, as it is now called, runs off Tennyson Road. Council posed no objections to the name, but stated that the township accepts no responsibility for purchasing or erecting identification signs for the road.

The new name will make it easier for ambulance and fire service to respond to emergencies and it will help people locate properties.

Two avid gardeners share their secrets

Cobocok

Sheila Lake - 454-2314

On Sept. 26th the Burnt River Somerville Centre was the scene of a delicious beef barbecue, with a good crowd of hearty appetites present to enjoy all the goodies.

On Monday night, the Horticulture Society met in the Anglican Church Parish Hall. A good attendance enjoyed Mary Pearlmuter, who with her husband, bought the old Blythe school on the outskirts of Fenelon Falls, and who are avid gardeners, organic gardeners, at that!

Mary has studied organic gardening with a zeal few have, and told the audience what to use, how to recycle some of our throw-away garbage in gardening, using milk cartons, newspapers and plastic jugs, and what she has learned in controlling the bugs and insects that destroy plants.

The Victoria County Senior Citizens Council will hold its fall dinner at 6 p.m. on Oct. 8th at the Fenelon Community Centre at Cambray. The tickets are $12. each.

The lucky winners in the Cobocok Senior Citizens draw were: First Prize, quilt - June Sanderson of RR6 Cobourg; Second Prize, fifty dollar voucher was Lorna Harris of RR1 Kirkfield; Third Prize, Five Wintario tickets, Bernice Taylor, Buckingham, Quebec.

Lots of people are on the sick list. Olive Goodband of Baddow is now home after a stay in Ross Memorial Hospital, Dorothy Powell is home from Peterborough Hospital and Lil Bailey of Norland is home from Toronto General Hospital. Carol Greer of Norland and June Foster have both been in hospital, but now home. Joyce Godwin of Burnt River had surgery in Toronto General Hospital and is slowly feeling better. Get well wishes to you all. Mrs. Eva Watson of Baddow remains in hospital.

The Ladies L.O.B.A. met at the home of Kay and Boris Roeske near Burnt River, last week. Sorry to see Kay confined to a wheel chair.

Ron Newman and Laurie Campbell are two who have been on the sick list and a young mother has had the measles. Wrap up warm on these chilly days!

Grace Jackson of Ocean Indiana, Mrs. Irene Brown of North Bay, Cliff and Louella Jewell of Paris, all cousins of the Kay family, were visitors recently.

Sympathy goes out to the bereaved families of the late Perry Kimble, son of Alf and Wanita Kimble and to Helen Handley, whose husband, Bob was laid to rest last week.

Joan Gillette underwent heart surgery in Toronto last week and is doing well. Get well soon, Joan!

Bob Hill of Newmarket, Mrs. Isobel Davis and Mrs. Jean Gibson, both of Sutton, Mrs. Bev Sourensen of Keswick, Mrs. Grace Davies and Mrs. Doris Keatch both of Island Grove, all were visitors of Mrs. Carolyn Strong on Buller Road, Norland last week.

UPTON/FLOOD WEDDING: Bernie and Loran Upton were married on September 12, 1992. A special thanks goes out to all those who helped make their day a special one.

Death stuns everyone

West Guilford

Eleanor Cooper - 754-2278

Stunned disbelief greeted the news of Cindy Rodley's death. Harry Rodley has lost his dear, dear wife and the three children, Derek, Katie and Chase the most wonderful kind of mother. Cindy and Harry moved to West Guilford from Hamilton, leaving two large families of brothers and sisters. They ran Hillcrest Haven next door to us and became great friends and neighbours and extended their friendship and neighbourliness into many areas: school where Cindy was on Home and School executive, sports for Derek and Harry, church life at St. Andrew's, and jobs outside the home where Cindy served on Chamber of Commerce staff and lately at Dawson Insurance while Harry works at the curling rink.

Often their extended family would come to visit and support them. They had already moved into their latest home past Eagle Lake and renovate and enlarged it beautifully before Cindy's untimely death.

Hers was a life of generosity, sound common sense, sense of humour and principles founded on Christian faith. She endeared herself to those she lived amongst and served.

Our lives will be the poorer for her early going, even though richer for the quality of life she expended while she lived.

The George Coopers from Riverview, N.B. have been here for most of the week, and the Alan Coopers for two days in that period, this being the first time for the newest member, Philip, to see his cousins from down east.

On Wednesday the United Church Women met for the fall rally at Zion United Church. From this area, Kathleen Owens, Eileen Barry, Doreen Lewis, and although now of Park Lane Apt., Eve Stata also attended this group.

On Thursday the Anglican Church Women met in Burnt River at St. Luke's for their fall deanery. Valerie and Leslie Chumbley, Colleen Davison, Doreen Sisson and I attended this gathering. The Rev. David Burrows of Bobcaygeon officiated at the morning service, a brief business meeting was held at the community centre, and Betty Grace of the Anglican Fellowship of Prayer addressed us on part of this topic in the afternoon.

All faiths are welcome to ecumenical Thanksgiving service this Sunday

Wilberforce

Flo Elliott - 448-2618

A correction for last week's column: The Agricultural Fair board is having the Thanksgiving Dinner this week-end, not the Heritage Guild as reported in last week's column. Sorry about that.

The first Senior's card party of the season was held on September 25th. The Lone Hand prize was won by Barry Dunsford. Ladies High - Marjorie Tighe. Men's High - Floyd Tighe. The Lone Hand and also the door prize was won by Robert Saunders. Congratulations to all the winners. The next Euchre party will be on October 16th at 7:30.

The Reform Church of Highland Grove will be holding its special Thanksgiving service on Sunday October 11th. They would like to make it an ecumenical service and all are welcome to attend.

St. Margaret's Anglican Church will be having its ever popular Rummage sales every Saturday in October from 10 until 12. These sales are always well attended.

The Senior's day at the Legion was not very well attended. However, those who went had a great time as well as a delicious lunch. They tell me that those who weren't able to go missed a good afternoon of fun.

The Ecumenical Choir will start practising for Christmas on the 22nd of October at 7:30 at the Anglican Church. All those who love to sing and with the patience to learn are very welcome to attend. The practices will last about one hour.

Elsie Lewis, Marg Jeske and Gerald and Bessie Shackleton attended a Choir workshop in Bancroft last week. They found it very enjoyable and informative. Their new knowledge will be a great help to the Ecumenical choir as they practise their Christmas Carols.

There is a Catholic Cursillio week-end on October 30th to November 1st. This is a week-end for ladies only and it is not necessary for the men to have made a week-end first. This is something new, and a great chance for the ladies who want to make a week-end. For more information please call me. I have the application sheets and other information you may find helpful.

Remember when cottages would be closed for the winter at Thanksgiving, and you wouldn't see the owners until spring. Now with snowmobiles, the cottage is usually a yearly week-end retreat. A lot of folks even come to the country for the Christmas season, if the snow is deep enough.

The Silent Auction that was held at Agnew's Store is over. In spite of keeping track of the bidding I didn't win anything. Saturday was the day to up your bidding and that's what everyone did, except me. It was a popular event and they will likely have it again, so if you didn't win either, let's say better luck next time, and try again.

The following poem is from the Prayer Tree especially for Thanksgiving:

Autumn
We give thanks for the harvest of the heart's work
Seeds of faith planted with faith;
Love nurtured by love, courage strengthened by courage
We give thanks for the fruits of the struggling soul
The bitter and the sweet,
For that which has grown in adversity
And for that which has flourished in warmth and grace;
For the radiance of the spirit in autumn,
And for that which must now fade and die.
We are blessed and give thanks. Amen.

Open with a song
On Thursday night the Gooderham Public School threw open its doors for a barbecue and open house. After parents wandered through classrooms to look at all that has been achieved thus far, Principal Ruth Lewis led the children in song. Above, the children sing along with teacher Jim Hopkins

Grant offsets property taxes

Information

Doreen Hawman - 457-2733

The Ontario Property Tax Grant provides a rebate to eligible seniors to help offset the cost of their property tax or rental payment. The grant is based on 100% total property tax, or 20% total rent paid on an eligible principal residence, up to a maximum of $450. The grant is paid in two installments. The spring payment equals 50% of the previous year's entitlement and is paid automatically without application. The fall payment is based on an application form which is mailed automatically to most Old Age Security recipients. If you have not received your application for the fall portion of the 1992 rebate, contact your nearest Information Centre for assistance.

Due to new legislation this will change. Effective

January 1, 1993, eligible seniors will apply for the property tax and sales tax credits through their annual income tax return.
